

Mobile Health Care Service

A pilot health care project for older and vulnerable people in Haiyan-affected communities in the Philippines.

Poverty and access to health care are major challenges for older and vulnerable Filipino people.*

In 2013, Typhoon Yolanda (Haiyan) brought severe disruption to the lives of people in the Visayas region, and particularly affected older people.

In response, HelpAge International and Coalition of Services of the Elderly (HelpAge-COSE) partnered with the local government units to deliver a community-based Mobile Health Care Service in municipalities and cities of Leyte and North Cebu.

Mobile Health Care Service aims to provide basic health care to the community, with a particular focus on older vulnerable people. Visiting older people in their homes by making health services closer and more accessible, especially those living in remote and mountainous areas, who are unable to visit health centres due to physical and financial limitations.

Over 13,000 older persons receive health care services.

The Mobile Health Care Service was introduced in four municipalities: Medellin (North Cebu), and Isabel, Tanauan and Tolosa in Leyte.

“He couldn’t walk and go to the clinic. The Mobile Health Care nurses changed his catheter every visit. Before this project, we had to travel to the provincial health centre just to have it changed.”
